

I have several notable accomplishments throughout my personal life, my education and my work experience. Probably the most notable professional accomplishment would be the completion of a ticket selling platform during my first period of employment at Hive.

I joined this startup as the sole technical member of the team at a time when they were in the run up to launching their product and had just lost their previous technical member. I was asked to complete the platform, which they had been developing over the past several months, within the next two weeks. This involved resolving over 30 bug issues and implementing two features one for processing payments and the other for tracking email openings.

While my skills have developed since then, at the time I was still coming to terms with web development and I saw this as a huge challenge. Despite working long hours, I managed to pull it off and to this day, I look back on that period for inspiration.
